AWR Shares Gospel in the Shadows

“I have to show these things to my father, even if he and the community kill me.” The young woman who spoke these words is from a country in which converts to Christianity are often persecuted and even killed. Adventist World Radio broadcasts are attracting people to the gospel no matter what the consequences.

Can you imagine what it must be like to live in a country that has little or no religious freedom . . . a country in which accepting Jesus could mean persecution and even death? These are exactly the circumstances that new converts face in some parts of the world as they accept new life in Christ.

These are the places to which missionaries cannot go, or places in which the Gospel, if it is shared at all, is done quietly—in the shadows. As I travel, I find that in so many places this is the norm, NOT the exception. Yet it is in these very places that AWR is experiencing wonderful success. AWR breaks through the silence . . . through boundaries and borders, bringing the Voice of Hope to millions who have no hope. The following true-life account we received from one of our producers may bring tears to your eyes. We cannot share the names of this father and daughter or where they live, but this miraculous and moving story illustrates how the Holy Spirit and AWR are working as a great team:

“A man was turning his radio dial and discovered the AWR program and began to listen to it secretly. After a time he quietly approached an Adventist pastor for more information. Unknown to him, his daughter also discovered AWR and not only listened to the radio but secretly joined an Adventist youth Bible study group.

“Because of the serious danger, neither of them knew that the other had been faithfully listening to AWR or studying the Bible. Finally the daughter said to the pastor of the youth group, ‘I have to show these things to my father, even if he and the community kill me.’ She brought home a set of DVD Bible studies and other literature. Imagine the surprise—and relief—when the daughter discovered that her father was also a secret believer, and when the father discovered that his daughter had already committed her life to Jesus. They now are faithfully making discreet contacts to others in their country and telling as many people as they dare to listen to the AWR broadcast.”

Appreciation for Prayer

“It is indeed a joy to be part of the worldwide family of Seventh-day Adventists. I am overwhelmed that in our vast church the Review and Herald family has decided to petition the throne of grace for our fellow workers and students at Crawford Adventist Academy.

“I strongly believe that the Lord blesses those who give Him something new to bless; therefore our constituency is about to embark on a $20 million capital campaign to build a new facility for the future generation of our church. As you pray for our school, please remem-

Gospel in the Shadows

Jesus told us that there will be times that “brother will betray brother to death, and a father his child. . . . All men will hate you because of me, but he who stands firm to the end will be saved” (Matt. 10:21, 22, NIV).* Jesus spoke these words in the context of sending out the twelve disciples to witness for Him. This daughter who is living right now somewhere on this planet demonstrated the courage to witness to her father even if it meant the giving of her life. What an example of courage and commitment! Are we ready to make a similar choice to stand and identify with Jesus in the tests that will come to us? Only a close relationship with Jesus will empower us to make those choices and be faithful when we are challenged.

In this instance the father also miraculously discovered the AWR broadcast and responded to the love of Jesus, and now father and daughter have each other's support in their further dangerous work of witnessing. The AWR ber our campaign and our students that they will be successful not only academically but in heavenly values.

“As we pray together under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, the Lord will bless our ministries abundantly. May God continue to lead and direct you in your leadership.

“Sincerely,

broadcasts continue to serve as a tool to help this team carefully do their witnessing. AWR's mission is simple: to help listeners around the world learn more about Jesus Christ. Now, more than ever, we must keep the message of Jesus on the airwaves. Our work is not done until Jesus comes!

This new year we will be adding broadcasts in some new languages and in places in which very little gospel work can be done in other ways. Your prayers and financial support will help AWR reach more people like this father and daughter. If you wish to help financially, please visit www.awr.org.

Thanks to You!

We want to express our appreciation and thanks to all our Review and Herald family for all your kind words of comfort and expression of sympathy at the loss of our dear son, Danny. We appreciate so much all the cards, visits, phone calls, and the tremendous monetary gift. There is nothing like the R&H family and we are happy to be a part of it. Thank you so much for your support.—Ray and Irma Brooks.

Thank you so much for the beautiful basket of flowers that came to my room in the hospital the day of my surgery. Thanks also for your prayers and well wishes. See you all soon!
—Margie Tooley.

Gospel Praise Vespers

The Johnson-Greene Family Quartet will present an hour of gospel praise at the Hagerstown SDA Church on February 2 at 4:30 p.m. Their focus on heaven and our journey toward that goal is a sure source of warm encouragement for listeners of all ages. Everyone is welcome to come and enjoy their harmonies. Del and Andee Johnson, and Harold and Christine Greene, members of the Westminster, Maryland, Seventh-day Adventist Church, are the primary participants.

What You Need to Know Before Looking for Health Information Online

A recent study conducted by the National Institutes of Health (NIH) indicates a growing number of Americans are seeking general health information from the Internet as a first source, rather than consulting their doctors. Here are the top five things to consider when evaluating health information online:

1. Always consider the source of information. Good sources include government sites; university or medical school sites; not-for-profit groups whose focus is research and teaching; and organizations dedicated to providing health-care services and sharing knowledge from their own medical experts, such as Mayo-Clinic.com.

2. Avoid sites that are mainly sponsoring a product or service or that want you to take action right away, such as buying something or disclosing personal information.

3. Make sure the site you're turning to has the latest information.

4. Information should be presented in a clear and concise manner, and should be factual and verifiable.

5. Make sure the site states clearly who the intended audience is. Many professional sites have one section for consumers, another for medical professionals.

Where Caregivers Can Turn When They Need Help!

There are now an estimated 15 to 20 million people who can consider themselves members of the sandwich generation, and many of them are facing the same challenge—simultaneously caring for and supporting their aging parents, children still living at home, and in some cases their grandchildren as well.

All the responsibility puts a lot of stress on people who may have thought they would at last be able to put all their worries aside and just enjoy life. Now they have to figure out if it's safe for their parents to take certain over-the-counter medications, what a new diagnosis means, and if their son's fever warrants a doctor's visit, all at the same time.

A good place to turn for the answers to these questions and more is www.MayoClinic.com. In addition to a broad and deep collection of resources on medical conditions and lifestyle, there are interactive tools that can be used to self-assess one's health and a feature called "Ask a Specialist," in which the answers to questions asked by users are posted. Those who don't find the answers they're looking for can e-mail their question to a Mayo Clinic specialist.

To ensure medical accuracy and reliability, all of the material on www.MayoClinic.com is written by health writers and reviewed by physicians, scientists, and researchers who are experts in their respective fields.
